Hello my name is Marcie the women behind the scenes putting together my first newsletter. I am aiming to have this done one a month. To introduce you to my world where I will entertain you with some interesting things to do and people I meet. Come and spend some time and let me know what you like or don't like.

Project

Five Little Snowflakes

One Little snow flake with nothing to do. Along came another than there were two.

Two little snowflakes laughing with me. Along came another than there were three.

Three little snowflakes looking for some more. Along came another than there were four.

Five little snowflakes dancing a jive. Along came another than there were five.

I got this cool idea from Shelly at dltk.com I have done this poem having five children at a time hold the pieces to the story while we acted it out. I lamented the pieces so the pieces would last. ^{continued from page 1} ~~The~~ enjoy story so much we would also use the snowflakes with bean bags. We put the snowflakes on the floor and had the children try to hit them. Try laying the snowflakes on the floor and have the children jump from one to another. We got a lot of use out of this project! If you try it let me know how it came out and how you use it.

Quote Of the Month

"If you want your children to be intelligent, read them fairy tales. If you want them to be more intelligent, read them more fairy tales."

— Albert Einstein
